Sample 1: I like action movies or any type of movie where there is something dramatic happening. I suppose I like to be entertained and carried along by the quick movement of a film - anything like a car chase or people escaping from a dangerous situation or some sort of dramatic confrontation. That's why I like films like Mission Impossible or war movies.

Note that the response uses common conversational phrases (“I suppose I like”) but also demonstrates more sophisticated language (“dramatic confrontation”).

Sample 2: I like all kinds of movies as long as they have a strong plot and some reasonable acting but my favourite type of film is Thrillers because I like to be scared. I have always looked for that sensation of fear passing over me when something particularly gruesome happens or there's a chilling twist to the story. My wife seems to laugh at Thrillers but I spend my time at the cinema peering through my eyes.

Once again, the ideas are simple but the speaker demonstrates a good use of appropriate vocabulary: scared, sensation, gruesome, twist, peering.
